Mining Interest Reviving

Tonopah is, without question, the greatest silver camp and one of the greatest mining camps and producers of precious metal in the western hemisphere. Goldfield is still one of the greatest in point of production, and despite its recession from its former pre-eminence among the producers of gold, it has never passed through a period of industrial inaction comparable with that through which the neighboring camp lived and from which it has emerged in triumph. A firm conviction prevails, not only in this camp, but among persons throughout the country who are interested in mining or mining investments, that Goldfield will repeat the experience of Tonopah, but in a degree proportionate to her greater importance in point of production.

The two camps are now witnessing an influx of visitors surpassing in numbers and in importance to the mining industry any that they have known since the early days of the big boom. These men are for the most part investors, potential investors or men already financially interested in the enterprises of the districts and anxious to find further opportunities for similar investment. Visitors to one of the camps invariably desire to inspect the other and of the scores who have expressed their views regarding Goldfield, all have voiced the same prediction; that this district is on the eve of coming back in a manner calculated to attract the attention of the entire world and that its true greatness has not yet been realized but will yet be demonstrated by figures of production surpassing those shown by any mining district in the annals of the industry in this country. This belief is based upon a solid foundation, supported by results already obtained and by the elaborate scheme of operations now being conducted.

There can be no boom of the type witnessed in this camp six years ago and legitimate mining does not need or desire such a boom, but if lasting results are to be obtained all efforts are now being directed in the right manner to secure them.—Goldfield Tribune.

Mines and Management

A Colorado operator (?) once remarked that he had no use for a mine that would not stand bad management, and this remark has become one of those apparently deathless phrases which will cling as long as there are men who need such things in their business. Needless to say, it is odds on that the particular Coloradoan who is responsible was one of those operators who know little or nothing about operating, but who concealed his incompetence by vague words which sound fine but which are merely cloaks to cover a real lack of sound ideas. The type is more or less familiar.

Of course a mine that persists in paying handsome profits in the face of such managerial handicaps is a lovely thing to own, and there are such mines. For instance, in the early days of Cobalt, the genius of a section hand was all that was required to dig out the rich surface ores at a rate which caused dollars to flow in at a rate far in excess of what could possibly be spent. But in the great majority of instances the policy of our Colorado commentator would lose to the mining investor dollars where it would gain him cents.

One of the most important factors in mining is management, and it never pays to forget to scrutinize carefully the men at the helm of an enterprise, no matter how rich the orebodies. No one can fail to appreciate the difference between Green Cananea under Col. Green and under the Cole-Ryan regime. F. Augustus Heinze at one time dominated a line of very promising properties, but the profits to date have been scarce.

Few mines can stand bad management, and those that can are really losing money for their owners by the exact measure of the difference between the profits earned and what should be earned.

Marriage and Divorce for Money

It is to the credit of the majority of men that they idealize womanhood, but there is one aspect of the modern divorce evil that has not hitherto been publicly discussed to any extent, although it has doubtless often suggested itself to the most ardent admirer and defender of the sex. Now, however, it has been brought to public attention in some forceful remarks from the bench by a New York judge upon a motion that a woman who had brought suit for divorce be awarded $6000 a month alimony pending a final decision in the case. Supreme Court Justice Aspinwall turned loose the vials of his indignation by saying:

"This talk of women needing fortunes to maintain their position is all bosh. Lots of women haven't any station until they marry rich men. They do it to get all they can out of their husbands, and when the husbands put on the brakes they ask divorce and fortunes in alimony. Society women in New York make me tired. They go to hotels or their clubs, drink highballs and smoke cigarettes instead of being at home making their husbands happy. When a suit is brought against a poor man who is unfortunate enough to own a million, they come into court and talk about maintaining their social position.

The defendant in the suit is a very wealthy banker and there was no question of his ability to pay the amount asked for if the judge had deemed it just. Neither is there any doubt that Judge Aspinwall put his verbal finger upon one vulnerable spot in the armor of the class of women who marry on the basis of a sharp commercial transaction. Happily the class is not large, but exactly how large it is we would rather Mrs. Gertrude Atherton should estimate than attempt it ourselves.

property. He is one of the pioneers of that part of the district and has familiarized himself with the ore and various formations of the properties there.

NOW, HONEST! DIDN'T YOU?

Sears, Roebuck & Co. have invaded the west, but not as heretofore. They have been shipping goods to the west for many seasons, but now they are investing. They closed a deal last week for an entire block of buildings out in Denver, for the establishment of a big branch house. Their net profits last year were six million dollars in round numbers. No wonder they can buy a block in Denver's busy district, and here's betting a popcorn ball against a doughnut you help them to be able to close up the deal.

TO CYANIDE ORE FROM THE DAISY LEASE

WORKINGS THAT HAVE LONG BEEN IDLE WILL BE MADE AGAIN TO PRODUCE.

Cyanide operations will be conducted on the property of the Diamondfield Daisy company by Al McCoy, who has been shipping ore from his leased ground on the Goldfield Belmont, says the Tribune. He has secured tanks and will at once proceed to treat broken material that is on the dumps and in the mine workings, operating chiefly in the eastern part of the property, where lessees worked and exposed ore of shipping grade some time ago.

There is a considerable quantity of fine material that will require only screening and later, if these operations prove to be successful, will install a crusher. The presence of comparatively coarse material will obviate the necessity for agitating the product in the cyanide tanks and it is believed that there is much material that will yield a good profit from this process of treatment.

McCoy will continue to extract and ship ore from workings near the surface on the Goldfield Belmont.

The following testimony proves their worth: Mrs. George Gingery, Railroad st., Winnemucca, Nev., says: "Although I have never had occasion to use Doan's Kidney Pills, I know they are a good remedy for backache and kidney trouble. They have been used in my family with good results and I can safely recommend them."
